COMMENTARY

With China closed for the first week of October for Golden Week, markets appeared to focus on the re-emergence of US-China trade tensions, shifting from broad tariffs to targeted regulatory actions, focusing on areas like China's rare earth export restrictions and US threats of a 100% tariff on November 1st. Sentiment did, however, shift into the end of the month as agreements were reached and tensions eased.

Through the month, economic data releases highlighted areas of resilience and strategic shifts despite ongoing economic restructuring. September exports rose 8.3% year-on-year while imports were up 7.4% year-on-year. The economy's third-quarter growth of 4.8% was marginally higher than market expectations, even amid a protracted real estate slump. Furthermore, industrial production demonstrated robust strength, climbing 6.5% in September and suggesting solid performance in the nation's manufacturing backbone.

PORTFOLIO REVIEW

The Guinness China RMB Income Fund's CNH Y class gained +0.04% in October. The recently added a quasi-sovereign green bond issued by the Saudi Public Investment Fund, GACI 5% 2027, was the largest contributor to positive performance. The yield on the 2-year benchmark China Government bond fell 3bps to 1.40%. The onshore and offshore renminbi returned +0.22% and +0.21%, respectively, against the dollar. Against the euro, the currencies returned +2.14% and +2.12%, respectively. The A1 WARF (weighted average rating factor) rated portfolio yields 1.75% and has a duration of 1.54 years.

OUTLOOK

China's economy is undergoing a fundamental structural shift, moving decisively away from a traditional reliance on high-volume real estate and infrastructure investment. The new focus is on achieving high-quality development and technological self-sufficiency. This transition means that moderating growth, targeting the 4% to 5% range, is intentional, as Beijing prioritises long-term stability and sustainable expansion. The new growth engine is fuelled by "new quality productive forces", with heavy strategic investment in cutting-edge sectors like Electric Vehicles (EVs), Artificial Intelligence (AI), and advanced manufacturing. Recent, incremental fiscal measures implemented since October have started to ease local funding constraints. This policy action has boosted sentiment, with leading indicators, such as the construction sector's business activity expectations index, rebounding sharply to 56.0 (where readings over 50 indicate expansion), suggesting a potential pickup in forward-looking construction sentiment.

Despite this forward-looking strategy, significant challenges remain major drag factors. The prolonged real estate crisis continues to suppress domestic demand and erode local government revenue, while low consumer confidence remains sticky, hindering the pivot toward consumption-led growth. Furthermore, Beijing is strategically focused on achieving greater technological self-reliance and securing its domestic supply chains, a commitment likely to be solidified in the next five-year plan. While China's overall exports (nearly 20% of GDP) are modest compared to those of some other major economies, the strategy aims to maintain absolute advantage in key "commanding heights" sectors while becoming less dependent on foreign inputs. Policymakers are responding with targeted fiscal support and an unyielding focus on achieving greater technological independence to navigate a complex and volatile global environment.

The long-term outlook for the renminbi remains fundamentally positive. This stability is anchored by China's immense and deeply integrated economy, which supports the strategic goal of internationalising the currency. Continued market liberalisation and the development of RMB-denominated assets further support its gradual rise. In the near term, the currency could be under pressure from domestic economic weakness and international interest rate differentials. The People's Bank of China (PBOC) is expected to maintain a policy of managed stability, actively intervening when necessary to prevent excessive depreciation, ensuring the RMB supports the broader economic transition rather than hindering it.
