COMMENTARY

Data releases through November revealed persistent underlying demand weakness in China. While retail sales showed relative resilience at 2.9% year-on-year and CPI unexpectedly rose to 0.2% due to travel and food costs, industrial value-added growth slowed to 4.9%, and core disinflation remained a threat with factory gate prices (PPI) falling 2.1%.

The property sector remains the primary drag, evidenced by a steep 14.7% drop in Fixed-Asset Investment (FAI) year-to-date, which contributed to an overall FAI contraction of 1.7%. The manufacturing purchasing managers' index (PMI) slightly stabilised at 49.2, but the non-manufacturing PMI softened to 49.5, confirming the general softness in domestic demand.

In a positive signal, the renminbi demonstrated unexpected strength against the dollar, supported by corporate FX flows and shifting market expectations around US interest rates.

PORTFOLIO REVIEW

The Guinness China RMB Income Fund's CNH Y class gained +0.09% in November.

The China Government bond which matured at the end of the month was the largest contributor to performance in November. The USD green bond used by the Saudi PIF, Gaci 2027s also enjoyed strong performance.

The yield on the 2-year benchmark China Government bond rose 2bps to 1.42%.

The onshore and offshore renminbi returned +0.79% and +0.86%, respectively, against the dollar. Against the euro, the currencies returned +0.26% and +0.33%, respectively.

The AI (WARF) rated portfolio yields 1.64% and has a duration of 1.46 years.

OUTLOOK

China's policy focus remains on targeted credit support, yet the sustained weakness in household and corporate confidence makes more forceful, broad-based easing measures, including rate cuts, a key possibility. This potential need for stimulus is set against a backdrop of stabilisation in the Chinese economy, which is being supported by a strong, cost-competitive export engine that has contributed to recent IMF growth forecast upgrades. However, significant structural imbalances persist. Weak import growth confirms low underlying domestic demand, deflationary pressure is notable in the industrial sector, and the property sector remains the largest drag. These factors are currently weighing on confidence. In the long term, China is strategically leveraging its "engineer dividend", the ability to scale up advanced manufacturing as a key competitive advantage.

The near-term renminbi outlook is characterised by a balance of opposing forces. Domestic calls for policy easing to stimulate fragile corporate and household confidence create pressure for redback weakness. Conversely, the external environment, specifically a potential peak in US rates and continued technical support from corporate FX flows, supports its resilience. The likely outcome is that the renminbi will remain range-bound, as the People's Bank of China actively manages the exchange rate to maintain stability while balancing domestic stimulus needs.
